From 1973 through 1976, Mr. Korn was an associate with Davis Polk & Wardwell (New York City). He was appointed Assistant United States Attorney, Criminal Division, Southern District of New York in 1976 and served in that capacity through 1981.

Mr. Korn has tried over 150 cases and argued over 50 appeals in federal and state appeals courts.

Mr. Korn is one of the senior partners of the LePatner firm responsible for complex construction litigation. Mr. Korn recently successfully represented an institutional client that operates one of the country's most respected continuing care facilities in recovery of insurance proceeds from its carrier for damages sustained by the client in the course of construction of a major residential unit development. The matter was resolved after the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York granted summary judgment in favor of the firm's client declaring that the costs were covered by the builder's risk policy. For the past two years, Mr. Korn has represented two owner/builders in separate arbitration proceedings involving the conduct of the general contractor and construction manager handling the build out of these high-end Manhattan residential units. These proceedings have involved over 43 hearing days and extensive forensic accounting evidence concerning the financial management of the projects by the contractor and construction manager. Mr. Korn also successfully represented the owner of a landmark town house in Manhattan in proceedings in New York Supreme Court and before the NYC Department of Buildings to require a neighboring property owner to remove a three-story wall constructed by the neighboring property owner and attached to the town house, in violation of a court order and regulations of the Department of Buildings.

Mr. Korn served as member of the Appellate Division, First Department Disciplinary Committee from 1982 to 1988 and was elected and served as Councilman, Town of Mamaroneck in 1988. Together with his wife, Mr. Korn acquired the original Nuremberg War Crimes papers of William Donovan, head of the OSS in World War II, and donated them to Cornell University for research. With the assistance of a former client, a scholarship was established at Cornell University for research on war crimes prosecutions. That client endowed a lecture at Cornell Law School entitled, "The Art, Commerce and Ethics of Contemporary Law." The Cornell lecture series attracts national speakers to address issues involving the practice of law. Lecturers have included the Chairman of the Board of one of the country's largest tobacco companies, the Attorney General, State of New York, and the United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York who addressed the Cornell University community about the role of the Justice Department in the war against terrorism in the aftermath of the September 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon. In October 2003, Mr. Korn co-moderated a panel discussion at Cornell Law School entitled "Accountability for War Crimes in Iraq". The panel included the Special Assistant for War Crimes to the CIA Director and former Clinton Administration Ambassador at Large for War Crimes. Mr. Korn established the Henry H. Korn Fund for Criminal Justice, which endowed the Domestic Violence Clinic at Pace University School of Law in 1997 for Pace Law students to work with the New York County District Attorney's Office in investigating and prosecuting domestic abuse cases.

Mr. Korn has authored several articles in the New York Law Journal including: "District Attorney Scandal in the Duke University Case," January 3, 2007; "Pitfalls of Construction Facing the Owner: Accounting Traps Found in Standard AIA Documents," November 20, 2006; "The Limits on the Crime Victim's Counsel to Threaten Referral to Law Enforcement Authorities," published February 25, 2005; "Insuring Construction Against Water Infiltration and Mold Contamination," October 25, 2004; and "Building Security Measures and Owner Liability After Sept. 11," May 1, 2003.
